

TERMS OF USE

The Office of the Ombuds provides an independent and confidential space where faculty, staff, postdocs, graduate, professional, and undergraduate students (except for individuals covered by a collective bargaining agreement and employees of Duke University Health System) can seek informal and impartial guidance to address concerns, conflicts, or issues related to their experiences with or within Duke University. Use of the Office is voluntary. By electing to use the services of the Office of the Ombuds, you agree to not record conversations and to never seek to compel the Office of the Ombuds to disclose any information shared or received as part of providing Office of the Ombuds services in any other forum, including internal or external administrative or legal proceedings. You agree to honor the Terms of Use of the Office of the Ombuds and understand that it is the Ombuds and the Office of the Ombuds that retains the right to confidentiality of communications and that this is not something that can be waived by others.

The Ombuds is not an official of Duke University and is not authorized to receive notice of claims against the University. If you wish to put the University on notice and obligate the University to respond, the Office of the Ombuds can provide information about alternative avenues.